HEARING IS BEING HELD IN ITHACA

was named Willis or Welch, and said that she had never seen the woman before or since and did not know who she was.

She told of Brennan's making improper advances to the girl and of his being repulsed by her. It was said that Elchorn claimed that he would if Brennan didn't. She claimed to have seen Elchorn and Brennan grab the girl and take her into a bedroom, Elchorn having her by the neck. They came out in about fifteen minutes she stated, and that Elchorn and Brennan were supporting her, Elchorn having one hand under her arm and the other under her throat, and that Brennan had one hand under her arm and the other lower down and that they were really carrying the girl. She claimed that just before this the party had liquor to drink.

She claims that the two men took the girl out of the house to a car in front of the house, and that Inez Johnson got their wraps and took them out. The other couple that was present went out just ahead of Mrs. Johnson, who said to Mrs. Gilson when she got out on the porch, "Don't tell Anna." She said that two of the people did not get into the car.

She also stated that early the following morning Elchorn came back and when she asked him what they had done with the Epler girl, he claimed that he said that she had been left where the body would be found. She also claimed that he returned in the afternoon and told her the body had been found, and also that he inquired for Inez Johnson.

When asked why she had not told the officers about the matter when she had been questioned several different times she said she was afraid of the people who were at her house that night.

When the defense finished with her, Kelly S. Searl started a cross examination and before he got through brought out an interesting fact that explained the arrest of Dorsey Bush, alias Dorsey Willis at Camp Grant, Illinois, two weeks ago, where he had recently enlisted. Attorney Searl showed her a number of pictures and she identified one of them as the third man at her home that night. It was Bush, now under arrest and being held for Gratiot officers in Illinois, priding the issuing and serving of extradition papers, which will probably be served before the week is over.

A hot fight is being looked for at the hearing of Joseph F. Brennan, showman, of the Kelly-Brennan stock company, under arrest charged with murder in this case. His hearing starts when Elchorn's ends. As soon as it is finished the hearing of Mrs. Johnson will be held.

Stockholders' Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of stockholders of the First State Bank of Alma, Mich., for the election of directors and the transaction of any other business that may come before the meeting, will be held at the office of said bank on Tuesday evening, the fifteenth day of January, 1918. Polls open 7:30 to 8:30 p. m. (24-25-c)
CARL H. WASHBURN, Cashier.

WAR WORK FOR WOMEN.

The week of March 18 has been definitely determined upon by the Woman's Defense committee as the date for the registration for War service of the women of Michigan. Heartiest support and approval of this great undertaking has been given to the Woman's Committee by the Governor and the War Preparedness Board, and at least half a million registration cards will be printed by the War Board. Governor Albert E. Sleeper will in due time issue a proclamation setting aside the week of March 18-25 as the particular date for taking the census of Michigan's woman power. Preparatory to this registration district conferences will be continued throughout the state similar to those which have already been held in Detroit, Grand Rapids and Kalamazoo. Ypsilanti, Traverse City, Bay City, Houghton and probably two or three other cities will have these conferences that the entire state may be covered by these schools of instruction for registrars.

DRAFT BOARD IS BUSY.

The County Draft Board finished sending out questionnaires Tuesday and is now busy looking over the papers and classifying the registrants. Several have not yet reported within the required seven days and their names are being turned over to the police. The majority of these cases are said to be the result of moving and not leaving a forwarding address, or notifying the draft board, which is a very dangerous practice. The work of the physical examinations will start in a few days, and the work will be pushed just as rapidly as possible, in order to have 75 men ready to send to Camp Custer by February 15th.

WILBER-HULER.

A pretty little wedding occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Leon Joseph, 825 Ely St., New Year's night, when Foster Wilber and Miss Dorothy Huler were united in marriage.

The pretty white arch decorated with ferns and pink carnations formed an appropriate background for the ceremony, which was performed by Rev. J. W. Priest in the presence of relatives and friends of the bride and groom.

The newlyweds will spend a short honeymoon in Owosso and Pontiac, after which they will return to the home of the groom.

BONE DRY ALASKA.

Alaska went on the "Bone Dry" list at midnight, Dec. 31. Some of the saloons which closed their doors have been operating since the days of the gold rush in 1896.

Alaska gave an elaborate farewell to the "hooch" as liquor is known in the northland and throughout the snowbound territory from Nome to Ketchikan, hundreds stayed up to watch the passing of the saloon, and the closing of the bars in the roadhouses along the trails.

SIMPLY HUMAN

By Jessie Ethel Sharwin

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

"Wild and perverse," proclaimed Rev. Willis Gascoyne. "I must decline to interfere. The girl is willful, her relatives indifferent. What I might say to her would only antagonize her and do no good."

"I think you misjudge her," spoke Bliss Warden warmly. "She is a child of nature, simply human." The speaker turned away rather unceremoniously, while the other shrugged his shoulders delicately and resumed the paring of his well-kept finger nails. The latter never mingled in common and unpleasant affairs outside of his ecclesiastical functions. Why should he? Was not his sole duty owing to his devoted flock?

What would become of the charity circle, the Ladies' Aid society, the lawn entertainments, if he wasted his efforts on the outside community?

It was all about a girl, a mere waif on the ocean of life, Lella Trask. She was the neglected daughter of the Merfells, a wretched family living at the edge of the town. Neither toll nor deprivation, however, could heat to earth the cheery, dauntless spirit of the lonely one. She romped with the little ones whenever free from duty and made them love her. She rode the wildest horses in the district, tamed them for their owners. A hoyden who had never known a kiss or a caress, she loved nature and the laughing ways of life and was content.

Bliss Warden was a city lawyer come down to Summerdale to visit friends and incidentally continue his wooing of proud, aristocratic Marcia Burrill, heiress, beauty and social queen. The day previous he had seen Lella Trask meet a man in the woods.

He knew the man at a glance. He had imparted his history to Rev. Willis Gascoyne. The latter betokened interest in the story, but none in the girl.

"A bright young spirit, with a soul clear as crystal," ruminated Warden. "Surely, if I am a real man I will not grudge the time and effort to save her from the clutches of a villain."

So he sought Lella Trask. He found her digging potatoes in the little patch back of the mere hovel in which she lived. He nodded to her in a friendly way. She smiled back radiantly.

"Can I speak with you for a few minutes?" he asked, and she moved to where he stood, looking up into his eyes trustfully.

"You are Mr. Warden," she said. "Little Ned Billings told me how you waded into the creek to save his toy sailboat. You are a good man and you are going to marry Miss Burrill. Oh! how happy she must be, and how lucky to have all those beautiful gowns and jewels."

Her artless innocence appealed to Bliss Warden more strongly than ever. "I am going to call you 'Lella,'" he said, "because I see you are my friend. Lella, will you trust me as a brother in a matter close to your interest, believe me, I seek only to save you from trouble?"

She nodded her head, but staring wonderingly at his earnest, friendly face.

"I saw you with a man near here yesterday. Is he a lover?" She flushed up instantly. The rosebud lips bore a momentary resentful expression. Then she lowered her eyes in confusion.

"He says he wants to be my beau," she fluttered. "And I never had one like other girls, and—he says he can get me work in the city so I can have fine dresses and a beautiful room and he will marry me."

"I am very sorry to make you feel grieved, Lella," said Warden, "but this man is a villain. Twice in the city courts he has been sentenced to prison for the last time for bigamy."

The girl swayed as if from a stunning shock. She could not doubt the words spoken. She burst into tears with the passionate outbreak.

"If you know how I long for some one to speak kind to me, to think of me to love me, you would know how hungry my heart is! Oh! I don't want to see him again. If he is as you say, but oh! I must love somebody, something, oh! why am I not like other girls—so poor, so lonely, so despised?"

Warden quivered the distracted spirit with gentle words. Then he went his way to the village. Within the hour the treacherous ex-convict was ordered to leave the town within twenty-four hours, or the city authorities would be notified. He slunk away like the cur he was.

Perhaps Lella was more subdued and serious after that. The revelation concerning the man she did not love, but whose false, flashing ways had interested her, opened her innocent eyes sorrowfully to the ways of the world. Then, too, a strange peace had stolen over her spirit.

"I must love somebody," she whispered longingly to herself. "No one need know it. He is far higher above me and can never be anything to me, but I can love Mr. Warden, and that will fill my poor life."

One day Lella did a wonderful act. Miss Burrill, coming in her phaeton down the road, dropped both lines as one snapped, and the nettled steed dashed forward at breakneck speed. Miss Burrill screamed and clung to the seat rail.

Lella tore off the ragged skirt she wore, poised to meet the onrushing horse, made a daring spring, flung the skirt over its head and clung to the bridle, dragged, trodden on, and finally flung upon a heap of stones, but the runaway brought to a halt.

Lella lay upon her poor bed, bruised and bandaged. The next day when Miss Burrill visited her she drew her skirts closely to evade contact with the bare floor. She sniffed the phlegmatic air of the hovel with contempt.

"I am glad you was not hurt," spoke Lella. "That was all I thought of, because you are Mr. Warden's true love, and I would do anything for him; he has done so much for me. Don't tell him," whispered Lella, "but I love him, and that makes me happy all the time. Oh, I would willingly die for him!"

"Indeed!" breathed Miss Burrill loftily, and Lella shrunk at the hidden fire of suspicion and hate in those haughty eyes.

"She is not good enough for you," the open-souled, artless Lella told Warden, when he, too, came to see how she was getting along, and within a week the amazed young man thought so, too. Miss Burrill had seized upon the circumstance of the mysterious interest of Warden in Lella to create a quarrel. As a matter of fact, her sickle fancy had been transferred to a new flame and she seized a ready excuse to break with her fiance. The enlightened Warden was abashed and hurt, but he kept his suffering to himself. The real soullessness of Miss Burrill showed in her neglect of Lella after one call. It was weeks before Lella could get about.

Warden had returned to the city, but several times he ran down to visit the little invalid and the day she was able, resting on his arm, to go out into the garden, he disclosed to her his future plans.

"I am going away, Lella," he explained—to cure his heartbreak. He did not tell her, but she guessed it, and regarded him pityingly. "I shall have gone a year. Your people here have agreed that I shall care for you and give you a chance in the world. You are to go to my sister in the city, who will look after you and place you in a school, and help you to enjoy the bright new life your true, gentle spirit deserves."

"I am learning to write," a little scrawl from Lella reached Warden three thousand miles away on his wanderings. "Just see if it isn't plain. I love Mr. Warden more than anybody else in the world."

And a year later, as the travel-weary man was longing to turn his face homeward, in perfect handwriting came a second note. "I can read anything now and they say I am the best writer in the school, see—I love Mr. Warden and always shall."

His heart warmed at the artless message. His gaze took in with surprise and gladness the new Lella Trask who greeted him at his sister's home.

"Kiss me, too," she told him, as he took his sister in his arms, and Bliss Warden recognized the unstilled love of an unspoiled being, and knew that he had found a treasure he must cherish to the end of life.

NOT ONLY INSPIRATION LOST

Error of Ralph Waldo Emerson Left Better Half Mourning Loss of Costly Hair Ornament.

In the days of Ralph Waldo Emerson matches were not sold loose in boxes, but were made up in "cards," as they were called, of a dozen or so, connected by a common wooden base, from which they were broken off as necessity required.

Emerson, so the story goes, used to place a fresh card of matches on a table by his bedside every night, together with a candle and some writing materials, in order that he might jot down at once any valuable thought that came into his mind during the night watches.

One night he awakened with a particularly brilliant idea and bethought himself at once of his cunning preparations for such emergencies. Reaching out, he grasped his card of matches, broke off the outer one and struck it sharply on the under side of the table. It failed to ignite. Swiftly he struck the next and the next, but with the same result.

Even so great a philosopher began to grow a little annoyed. Sitting up in bed, with grim determination he broke off one match after another until the card was gone. Not one gave the faintest spark.

By that time the idea was gone, too, and so his only recourse was to lay himself down again to ponder over a new problem, to-wit: "Why wouldn't those matches light?"

Whatever his solution was, however, it probably had to be revised the next morning, when he was awakened by a startled cry from his wife.

"Oh, what can have happened to my best tortoise shell comb?" she said. "I left it on the table at the head of the bed last night, and this morning it's in fragments."—YOUTH'S COMPANION.

"Trench Foot," New War Disease.

In spite of vaccines and modern hygiene disease still stands close to the enemy in the number of French and British soldiers it destroys. For example, trench warfare has developed a disease of its own, which is called "trench foot," and is a sort of gangrene. It is caused by standing in cold water day after day. A sort of mold enters abrasions in the skin and the foot literally rots away, often rendering an operation necessary.

Make Your Dreams Count.

There are two kinds of dreamers—the dreamer who merely dreams and the dreamer who puts his dreams into deeds. The man who has not his dreams is the man who will have very little to show in justification of his existence when the final balance is struck and the book of his life is closed. The man who has lived in dreams without deeds will show an equally sterile account. All of the world's great facts grew out of some man's or some woman's dream—a dream cherished and made into a reality.—Exchange.

Said Prayers Three Times.

Little Johnnie is in the habit of saying his prayers every night before starting on his journey to slumberland. One night he said his prayers three times in succession. It puzzled his mother that he should want to repeat them so often, as he had never done so before. Upon inquiring, the youngster said, "I said 'ten free times so I wouldn't have to say 'em for free nights.'"
